THE HIGH COST OF RESTRICTION

According to the Government statisticians, the cost of living in Canada has at last stopped climbing, and now stands about thirty-seven per cent higher than ten years ago. The statisticians base their calculations on what is sold per pound of certain lists of commodities at various times. Expenses will suggest to the average person that if this system fails it is in minimizing, and not in exaggerating, the increase. To a good many, 137 per cent would seem to be nearer the mark.

What this system of calculation would really seem to show is not how much more the consumer pays but how much more the whole community pays. It does not invariably hold that the retail price varies in keeping with the wholesale price. And there are a good many items in the average house account which do not show in the selected list upon which the statisticians base their conclusions.

It is noted by the Government experts that the increase in wholesale prices began in the summer of 1911, and only ceased some six months ago. This beginning was thus approximately coincident with the defeat of a measure for tariff reduction and the election of a Government standing for the exclusion of foreign-made goods. As the majority of the articles in the index are manufactured articles, the fact seems to be that many Canadian manufacturers promptly began to mark up the prices of their goods when the high tariff Government came into office, and only stopped when they reached the maximum figures which the present tariff allows them to charge.

Whether, however, the figures of the Government economists can not be relied upon as showing in any precise way the extent to which the cost of the household's necessities has grown, they may be taken as indicating in a general way the extent to which the manufacturing interests have been enabled to profit at the expense of the country at large by the establishment of a Government which could be relied upon to reduce the tariff, but whose high prices might be boosted. Naturally, too, they suggest that as the manufacturers have not exhausted their opportunities under the existing tariff, they will likely have the Ministers raise the tariff as preliminary to more price boosting.

WHERE EDMONTON SHOULD LEAD

Ten thousand Calgary people are said to have visited the city market on Saturday, to purchase farm products from the farmers and dealers. Quite evidently the market is being found a very effective and popular agency in that city for securing a supply of farm products at reasonable prices.

The popularity of the Calgary market is of comparatively recent growth. A year ago the city built a costly market building, but it stood idle until a few weeks ago, when a Consumers' League was formed whose object is to "boost" the market. Saturday's record attendance is an indication of the result.

Calgary is by no means unusually favorably situated for the development of a local produce market. The surrounding country is not better adapted than other parts of the West for the growing of vegetables and the production of poultry and dairy products; certainly no better adapted than the district which the market has to draw upon for its supply of fresh vegetables. What has been done in the south-eastern city can be done here, if the application of the same measure, or of means equally adapted to the conditions.

The market question has never been treated in Edmonton as seriously as it ought to have been treated. Perhaps because the country around is exceedingly subject to the ravages of insects, things are usually sold on the market there has been a disposition to let matters take their course, to trust that the growing production would accommodate the local demand and also regulate the prices within reasonable limits without any special encouragement of direct trading between the producers and the consumer. That has been the theory, and it is high time that it be undertaken the establishment of the local market on a more than originally effective basis.

A live local market would mean more than convenience and economy to the individual citizen. It could be made an instrument for advancing the development of the city along wholesale lines. In the older portions of the Dominion the best market towns are the former where there is a large population engaged in manufacturing occupations. The families of the factory workers provide a ready market for produce, and this weekly payroll enables the producers to get cash at any time for anything they may have to sell. No doubt in those communities the trade has grown up because of the manufacturing establishments, and not the factories themselves.

But to some degree it should be possible to make this rule work the other way in the West. All Western cities are seeking the establishment of industrial concerns. Admittedly one of the conditions which makes for the development of the city is the high wages which have to be paid to factory employees here as compared to wages paid in the East. This higher wage-scale is demanded because of the higher cost of living.

So far as table necessities are concerned, the great majority of them are grown, or could and ought to be grown, in the country tributary to the cities. The city where people eat about a certain and ample quantity, and at reasonable prices the year round should therefore be a comparatively cheap place in which to live, and therefore a favorable place for the location of manufacturing establishments.

If the market has followed the factory in the Ontario city, that is only natural. It is a necessary accompaniment of a factory. The market being a necessity in Western cities even without large industrial populations, it surely would be good business to establish the market and then use its existence and results as a means of getting the factories. And, of course, the city which "sees first" is the only one which can profit by the benefit. The country surrounding Edmonton being unusually well adapted for "truck farming," it would be short-sighted policy to allow this advantage to go unused in any event for want of the encouragement offered by market facilities. But to do so while knowing that the cost of living is the only consideration in the location of the factory, the city which has given us this advantage must be the one to profit.

There is a point in Varsity district which seems discernible that future generations will have no reason to thank the wise interpretation of his lesson.

Ernest Hornby, of Sunnyside Farm, has just formed a bee to build a frame barn.

He has gathered round and up she went.

And what I have told you is just what I meant.

2,000,000 MEMBERS OF
FEDERATION OF LABOR

Executive Council of This Organization in Session This Week

Atlantic City, June 21.—May important matters are to be taken up by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, according to the establishment of international concord would be simply throwing away one of the advantages nature has given us with which to build up here the great industrial city of the farther West.

The popularity of the Calgary market is of comparatively recent growth. A year ago the city built a costly market building, but it stood idle until a few weeks ago, when a Consumers' League was formed whose object is to "boost" the market. Saturday's record attendance is an indication of the result.

Calgary is by no means unusually favorably situated for the development of a local produce market. The surrounding country is not better adapted than other parts of the West for the growing of vegetables and the production of poultry and dairy products; certainly no better adapted than the district which the market has to draw upon for its supply of fresh vegetables, but no schools, for the want of teachers. Some of these districts have been successful in getting teachers, but there are none to be had.
